

Youth Symphony Shows Maturity

Yesterday afternoon's concert by the California Youth Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Aaron Sten, was proof that youngsters respond to high standards and high expectations.

The concert, held in the San Mateo High school auditorium under the sponsorship of the Bur-lingame High school Parent-Teachers' association, was, in Sten's own words; "a light one," but it included works of a genuine sym-phonic calibre by von Weber, Holst, Smetena, Bach, and Coates not a hackneyed rehashing of operetta tunes so often associated with young orchestras. This is undoubtedly one of the reasons for doubtenly one of the reasons for Sten's success with the group; he knows what to expect of young musicians and does not fall into the adult error of underestimating their abilities and interests.

There was precision, balance, and a surprisingly good orchestral tone. The general excellence of the ensemble playing indicated that the youngsters were aware of the relationship of their individual parts to the whole and to the me! parts to the whole and to the melody, wherever it might be -- no s m all accomplishment. Arthur Small accomplishment. Annal Ness, a senior at Burlingame High school, was the soloist in a demanding clarinet concerto by von Weber and played with remarkable poise and facility. In short, there was no need to invoke the tired, old cliche—"good.... for youngsters." The performance stood on its merits.

Here is a wonderful challenge for young instrumentalists; a fine opportunity for beginners to acquire the performance discipline and experience so valuable to the young musician. And here is a community project-more correctly, a reminsula project — deserving of much greater interest and support than was indicated by the size of yesterday's audience.

Sten has performed and invaluable service in organizing and directing such a group, capable of playing music beyond the scope of most high schoolage graphestres. of most high school-age orchestras. The wonder of the whole thing is The wonder of the whole thing is that he has done it in a little over one year, holding only weekly rehearsals, with a group that includes a wide variety of individual abilities. It almost leads one to believe that he conducts with a wand rather than the conventional
